To Whom it May Concern,

Our honeymoon 20 years ago at Niagara Falls was one of love, laughter, romance and an appreciation that a honeymoon can be more than just two.

You see when my husband and I were married we had a 1½ year old son. of course all arrangements were made for two. Baby-sitters were set up, activities planned to keep a little boy active, but of course all best plans fall through. Our option - to cancel the honeymoon or take our son with us. We opted to take him - diapers, strollers, port a crib and the whole scene along with our disappointment.

Fortunately it was a wonderful vacation. The many walks up and down the streets, visits to the many museums and souvenir shops were amazing. Our best ride on the Maid of the Mist - me trying desperately to hold on to our actions The year old says thought he should be able to touch the falls but thrilled about wearing the rain coat and still getting soaking wet.

Walking in the tunnels under the falls and being almost able to reach out and touch the water and to see the eyes of a child grow wider and wider with astonishment at this natural wonder.

During our week we found a beautiful little lake (a mile away) with little falls and so private.
We felt we had our own little island and again watching our son play in the little falls using his imagination, "these are the big ones." A day trip to a water park with slides and beaches make for relaxing afternoons. But of course the most spectacular were the falls themselves. We had the opportunity to see them both from the New York side as well as the Canadian side, I see the natural world with such force to be so beautiful. The light show in the evening sent chills up your spine.

Honeymoons are for newlyweds. Between the two people who pledged themselves to each other for eternity. We have been on a couple of vacations, always with our two children now 21 and 17.
Needless to say we are looking forward to our honeymoon. We did have a babysitter for one evening. We had our romantic dinner, holding hands and looking in each other's eyes.
Fortunately today we still hold hands and look in each other's eyes with some love, however, we still look forward to our honeymoon - no diapers strollers and no kids! Wouldn't it be wonderful to return to Niagara Falls

As a reminder, take long walks look in each others eyes and continue where we began.

Sincerely yours
Patricia H. Monagh
